DETAILED ACTION

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1,2,4-11, 15,16,17 rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kasabian-3,840,762 in view of Kercher-6,224,336.

Kasabian discloses a power tool (20) having a housing (22) with a coolant duct/plate (112) having round openings covering entire plate for a cooling medium to enter and cool motor, the duct consisting of a plate attached to housing (22), wherein at least one element (34) has rounded edges, wherein the openings are located in rows and columns separated by ribs of equal width. The openings of Kasabian are cylindrical and not conical. However, Kercher teaches cooling an object with a series of coolant holes (54) which are concial (col.4, lines 1-15). The conical shape improves cooling by allowing increased airflow which is more efficient and allows for decreased number of holes needed for proper cooling. Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at time invention was made to form coinalical holes in duct of Kasabian in order to increase air flow and more efficiently cool motor. Kasabian does not disclose the exact diameter or depth of the openings. However, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at time invention was made to form the openings within the claimed range of 0.15-10mm<sup>2</sup> since it has been held where the general conditions of a claim are disclosed in the prior art, discovering optimum or workable ranges involves only routine skill in the art. In re Aller, 105 USPQ 233.

Claims 12 ,13,18 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Kasabian in view of Kercher, as applied to claims above, in further view of Potter et al.-6,296,427.

Kasabian and Kercher teach the invention as detailed above, but does not show groupings of openings with different diameters (or cross sections). However, Potter teaches a hand powered tool having cooling means comprising openings combined in groups (62,64) having openings of varying cross section. Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at time invention was made to provide Kasabian with spaced groupings of openings, as shown by Potter, since both arrangements appear to work equally well for cooling a motor and would be within the level of ordinary skill in the art.

Response to Arguments

Applicant's arguments with respect to claims have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

The rejection now uses a teaching reference that would motivate one of ordinary skill to use conical holes in the duct of Kasabian. The Declaration is noted, however, it does not overcome the new rejection.
